

The Edge

Some photographs ask you to be patient. Others ask you to be brave.

I created this image along the rugged coastline of Cape Town, South Africa, while standing at the very edge of a sheer cliff in winds exceeding 50 miles per hour. Every gust pushed against me as the Atlantic Ocean exploded against the rocks hundreds of feet below, but the dramatic contrast between the ancient cliffs and the brilliant turquoise water was impossible to walk away from.

For me, this photograph represents the reward that often waits just beyond our comfort zone. It is a reminder that some of nature's greatest masterpieces can only be witnessed by stepping a little closer to the edge.
